

Master degree program

The unabated interest in the common history of Europe offers a variety of career opportunities on the German as well as on the European labor market to graduates of this Master degree program.

What characterizes the Master degree program European History?

With regard to the developments in European integration, the view from a historical perspective is more important than ever – for example, concerning the changing importance of regions and borders or regarding the development of economic and social systems. In order to find the right answers to questions within the historical context, it is not sufficient to examine the comparatively short era of the nation states. Additional knowledge of Ancient History and Medieval History is crucial to understand of the development of Modern Europe. The European history study program culminating with the Master of Arts degree teaches historical, political and cultural scientific skills qualifying historians for new occupational fields in the context of increasing European Integration.

“Intensive, informative and challenging – these are my feelings towards Master studies at TU Chemnitz. Within my studies of history, I am able to set emphases according to my individual interests and expand on them. The knowledge acquired during my prior Bachelor studies served as a solid starting point for dealing with media, publishers and cultural institutions in internships and activities at the university.”
